

I don't see why you want to restrict services that we pay for. Me being from Texas, I am disappointed to see two Texas representatives wasting their time on these Mickey Mouse issues, when the world is at war. With that aside, isn't the local radio industry a monopoly anyhow? And aren't monopolies illegal in the United States? What about satellite TV? They have local weather reports also. The Weather Channel will focus weather forecasts on certain cities that business travelers might be interested in. What is the difference in seeing it on TV, and hearing it on a radio? Both are forms of media, and if you are going to crack on XM, you better start cracking on those major TV stations also.
